

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to you to urge you to treat VOIP as a traditional telephone call when you regulate it. IP-enabled services offer exciting new possibilities for expanding the way we communicate, however, FCC should take responsibility to establish a regulatory framework that ensures that all providers of voice services are subject to meeting the social obligations of disability access, public safety and consumer protections. Especially, VOIP providers must contribute to the Universal Service Fund to ensure affordable access to telecommunications services for all Americans

Sincerely,

John H. West
